ECOBUST CASE STUDY: *DEMOLITION FOR A NEW DECK

Some demolition jobs require a softer touch. Traditional methods like jackhammering are impractical for residential areas where noise, debris and air quality are issues.

In this situation, a family from Vancouver needed to demolish a concrete staircase to make room for a new deck and turned to Ecobust to do the job cleanly and quietly.

The existing concrete staircase had two flights laced with 14-gauge wire mesh, and the bottom stairs and landing were two and a half feet thick. Using a jack hammer, it would've taken a two-man crew 32 hours to break up and remove the rubble from the staircase.

The estimated cost of labor, equipment rentals and fuel totaled $1,743. But with Ecobust, it took the same two-man crew eight hours to drill holes in the concrete, mix and pour the product into the holes, pull the pieces apart and then wheel them away. The total cost using the Ecobust method was $573, more than 60% cheaper than the traditional method.

Ecobust provides a safe, quiet and cost-effective method of demolition. And because Ecobust gets the job done in a matter of hours, this Vancouver family was able to build and enjoy their new deck sooner rather than later.
